

In 1999 a book by Joël Burny was published in Belgium entitled the “Contribution to the historical ecology of the Limburg Campine in the years between 1910 and 1950 – Written with information gathered through 200 conversations”.

Since then even more information has been collected that helps to reconstruct the cultural landscapes of the Campine and especially the neglected/ lapsed oak pollards. Last autumn, the Regionaal Landschap instructed Joël to carry out a new short-term study – this time into the ways people in the village of Lummen and how they used the oak pollards in the years from 1930 through 1960. This was through 13 conversations with 10 older people, born between 1923 and 1928.

Ted Green and Jill Butler have been invited to visit the area in April this year to meet Joël and his colleagues to share experiences and enthusiasm! There is a day set aside for a study tour (15th April) and if you would like to join that day please do contact us @In 1999 a book by Joël Burny was published in Belgium entitled the “Contribution to the historical ecology of the Limburg Campine in the years between 1910 and 1950 – Written with information gathered through 200 conversations”.

Since then even more information has been collected that helps to reconstruct the cultural landscapes of the Campine and especially the

neglected/ lapsed oak pollards. Last autumn, the Regionaal Landschap

instructed Joël to carry out a new short-term study – this time into the ways people in the village of Lummen and how they used the oak pollards in the years from 1930 through 1960. This was through 13 conversations with 10 older people, born between 1923 and 1928.

Ted Green and Jill Butler have been invited to visit the area in April this year to meet Joël and his colleagues to share experiences and enthusiasm! There is a day set aside for a study tour (15th April) and if you would like to join that day please do contact us:

@ ancient-tree-forum@woodlandtrust.org.uk